Lesson summary

'Indian weavers' is a short but beautiful poem. Weavers are busy weaving clothes in different colours throughout the day. Each colour, as well as the time of the day, is a symbol of different occasions in life. In the morning, they weave a bright blue coloured cloth for a new born baby. The blue color is a symbol of birth and happiness. During the day, they weave a purple and green cloth for the marriage veil of a queen. These colours are symbols of life's celebrations. Finally, at night, they weave a white coloured cloth for the shroud of a dead body. Clearly, white is a symbol of death.
